The United States of America covers a land area of 3,618,770 square miles (9,408,802 sq. km.) and is inhabited by some 341,000,000 individuals. For general state websites, try typing the name of the state followed by .cc, .com, .gov, .net, .org and .us like: alabama.cc alabama.com alabama.gov alabama.net alabama.org alabama.us A formula for contacting the state government in any capacity is to use the website state.zz.us, the zz representing the two letter abbreviation of the state, for example: state.zz.us becomes state.al.us for alabama. Try marvel.loc.gov/federal/state.local for general government information. For cities, refer to the cities section and type in the city name followed by .com, .gov, .net, .org and .us. Try typing the name of the city in followed by the state two letter abbreviation then us like natchez.ms.us or newyork.ny.us. An option is co.name of county.two letter state abbreviation.us like co.honolulu.hi.us. Another option is community.name of community.two letter state abbreviation.us like community.floyd.va.us For towns, try: town.ashland.va.us For cities try: ci.hopewell.va.us Beyond the free tourist guides from the many tourist bureaus out there, Fodors and Frommers each sell United States tourist guides that go around a thousand pages each and sell at a good price in paperback form. If you plan to travel in the western states, Sunset Magazine (sunset.com), 800-967-3189 has lots of ads about tourism places and a free feature where you circle what tourist info you want on a postcard and they send it to you or call the above number and ask if they have brochures for the area you're interested in. The Places Rated Almanac is at #307.764 at the library. Try #917 at the library. American Culture 1 The following essay refers to my opinion of Americans in general. Not all of them are like this but many are. If you want to know the mythical American archetype for both men and women, watch TV commercials, TV shows geared for each gender and check out frivolous lifestyle magazines for each gender. This is not what people are really like in the privacy of their own minds but it is the image they brainwash the American masses to try to emulate. Americans are a bunch of contradictory hypocrites which is no big deal because virtually everyone is like that even though no one will admit to it. Americans get an idea of what it means to be a cool, happy, successful citizen from TV, frivolous magazines, ads and each other. They reinforce these images by trying to imitate them such that they're all influencing each other with this massive subtle peer pressure going on. You have to conform to this idea of being cool if you want to fit in. If you want to be popular, you have to act and look like either the cheerleader for women or the captain of the football team for men. The Womens TV Network is all about fashion, makeovers, planning weddings, losing weight, getting cosmetic surgery, gossiping, etc. Watch those real housewives shows to see the typical brainwashed American woman. See all the cosmetics and hair coloring commercials on this network. The big contradiction in America is that everyone thinks they're cool and free but most have been vastly brainwashed by mass media indoctrination. Watch the ads and TV commercials then watch people imitating them. Disney movies are always about the nerdy underdog working hard to win in the end and enter the zone of the cool in-crowd. This is what we are; competitive, status-conscious people who desperately want to fit into some illusory, mythical in-crowd created by marketing executives. Americans are politically correct which means very careful to not offend others with a slip of the tongue or intentionally in matters of gender, sexual orientation, ethnic background, religion, socioeconomic status, etc. Americans are motivated mostly by money, material things, good-ta
