

Doctor Barnardo: Champion of Victorian Children

The first modern comprehensive biography of Thomas Barnardo. Written with the cooperation of the family and the charity. Illustrated with images from the Barnardo family archives and the picture archive of the charity. Born in Dublin in 1845, Thomas John Barnardo was a workaholic Irishman whose nonstop efforts in the cause of children's welfare landed him in an early grave at the age of sixty. However, in his own area of work it's fair to say he changed Britain forever, as much as any one man can. Much of modern child welfare started with him. Martin Levy digs into the filth and rot of what was the world's biggest empire to discover what this man was up to, what he was up against, and how wonderfully well he succeeded. In the cause of the children, he went banging on the door of his Victorian world and refused to stop until the day he died.

REVIEWS The strength in Doctor Barnardo is its content and the research accomplished by Martin Levy. He interviewed Barnardo's family, poured through historical records. In addition, Levy grew up in this area of London and knew its history and people. Several other historical people and topics are introduced: William Booth and his ministry, J. Hudson Taylor and the China Inland Mission, Children Act of 1908, illnesses and diseases affecting children in 19th century, society abuse of handicapped children, streetwise older children, education improvements. Impressionist Ink
