

Make a Plan: Possibility and Empowerment in a Time of AIDS

Make a Plan Possibility and Empowerment in a Time of AIDS I cannot look at HIV as anything other than one of the greatest gifts I have ever received. David Ross Patient In 1983, on his twenty-second birthday, David Patient was given six months to live. Back then, no one really understood the disease. All they knew was that it seemed to affect only gay men. They called it the Gay Cancer. Four months after he learned he was sick, he attempted suicide. Then he learned to hope. David Patient has been practicing hope ever since, along with eating nutrient-dense foods, maintaining outstanding healthful habits like exercise, helping other people, and renewing daily a relentless yet realistic commitment to maintaining a positive mental attitude. He found a way to get better. He found a lifetime of reasons to hope. These reasons make up his lifes work, which is giving hope and healthful practices to countless others who might believe that a HIV-positive status is a death sentence. David works with people who live in areas struck by abject poverty. They live with violence on a daily basis. Inequities abound. The young people cannot find work. The men sit around and drink. And too many of them are HIV-positive. Talk about reasons to lose hope. But David doesnt let them. This is what he tells them: I exist. Ive lived with AIDS for more than thirty years. I have lived a phenomenal life. Every morning I wake up with hope. If you are HIV-positive, dont tell me you dont have hope. And then he teaches them how to find hope. How to find a reason for living. How to look to the future with a realistic yet positive mental attitude. David and his partner, Neil Orr, travel around Africa teaching people what it looks like to live not die with HIV. This is the story of their work. And these are the many stories of those who have risen above a so-called death sentence. They are the stories of countless people who learned to live vibrant, productive lives despite a devastating diagnosis. They are the stories of even more people, healthy people, who have been motivated to follow in David and Neils footsteps, to share their gifts with those who might have less, and to make a difference in the lives of others. These are the stories the magnificent, compassionate, respectful, deeply loving people of this incredible continent who are learning that HIV is no longer a death sentence. They are coming together to become healthy, to live vibrant lives of contribution, to support their elders, to educate their children, to teach their daughters to run successful businesses, and more. This is the soul of Africa. This is the spirit of Africa. This is the future of Africa. This is David Patients beloved Africa.
