

The Survival Girls

You'll be delighted to meet the Survival Girls, turning their stories of abuse into empowerment in a Nairobi slum. --Hillary Clinton, Frontiers in Development

In the summer of 2011, writer, artist, and development worker Ming Holden journeyed to Kenya with the goal of creating a performance with refugee girls for World Refugee Day. At the end of her seven weeks there, she had founded the Survival Girls, a theater group comprised of six Congolese refugee women ages 18-23 living in a Nairobi slum. The Survival Girls have stayed together since then, an independent and self-sustaining womens empowerment and artistic expression group that has doubled in membership, competed in local competitions, and been contracted by the United Nations High Commissioner on Refugees to perform all over Nairobi about female genital mutilation and other social issues. The Survival Girls is a literary nonfiction book fully illustrated by Seattle artist Jody Joldersma. Proceeds benefit university education for the Survival Girls in Nairobi. Written in the first person by Ming, this is just one story of the groups genesis, a story of how the concept and enactment of safe space to assist with trauma recovery impacted womens empowerment in the refugee community in Nairobi's slums.
