

Sufferings in Africa

In August 1815, New England sea captain James Riley and his crew were shipwrecked off the coast of Moroccan Western Sahara. They headed inland, only to be captured by marauding Sahrawi natives who kept them as slaves. Riley and his crew were beaten, sun-burnt, starved, and forced to drink camel urine before eventually being rescued. Abraham Lincoln, listed Rileys narrative, alongside the Bible and Pilgrims Progress, as one of the three most influential works that shaped his views on slavery.
